Selecting an appropriate design program When you get new design materials, such as illustrations, photographs, and logos, you should check to see if they're compatible with your chosen image-editing program. Vector-based programs, such as Adobe Illustrator or Adobe InDesign, are much more powerful than raster-based programs, such as Photoshop or Fireworks. However, most vector images are raster files. Some graphic editors are designed specifically for designers who are designing logos or other graphics. You can use Photoshop or Fireworks, for example, but they're not as useful for design work as some specialized programs. ## Adobe Fireworks Adobe Fireworks is a vector drawing program that enables you to draw and design objects in vector format (see the preceding section). You can use Fireworks to create sketches, logos, charts, icons, and other designs for print or web. Fireworks comes in three different editions: Design Standard, Designer, and Web Designer. Each edition is designed to meet the needs of graphic designers at a particular level, with the Web Designer edition designed specifically for designing web elements. If you're a Fireworks novice, start with the Designer edition and then work your way up to the Web Designer edition as you gain experience. You can find a free version of Fireworks on the Adobe website.

[Late venous thromboses after hip arthroplasty. The role of anti-platelet therapy]. In a prospective study we evaluated the incidence of asymptomatic venous thrombosis (VET) in patients after hip endoprostheses for 4 to 8 weeks. Furthermore we investigated the role of the antiplatelet medication (APA) in this subgroup of patients. One hundred and four patients were examined by color duplex sonography of the femoral vein and common, internal, and external iliac vein up to 40-50 days after surgery. All patients received APA for at least 4 weeks and were examined again approximately one year later. Twelve (11.5%) of 104 patients had a VET in a mean time of 3.5 weeks, all had painless thromboses. Thrombosis were found in the above-knee-vein in 9 cases, in the common or in the internal iliac vein in 3 cases. 12 VET patients received a higher antiplatelet dose than 82 patients with no VET. 35 patients were without any further APA at follow-up. No difference in the rate of VET was found between non- and APA-treated patients. 6 patients refused the follow-up examination after the APA discontinuation, so that 77 patients of 104 could be analysed. 20 patients (26.0%) had signs of a new VET in a mean time of 5.5 months after discontinuation of APA. 9 patients could be shown to have a new VET after a mean of 4.7 weeks after the discontinuation of APA. At the same time a first analysis showed a new thrombosis in 12 patients (15.6%).Q: Java[synchronized block]block[synchronized] synchronized(block)synchronized(obj) { if (obj.isAlive()) }
